MERRIE ENGLAND.

Another Interesting Lecture by Mrs. Ganns.

Kawalahao Church was not as well filled as it should have been last evening at the production of the illustrated lecture of "Merrie England and Windsor Castle" given by Mrs. Ganns. As is usual in the presentations given by this gifted lady the occasion was one which was most pleasurable to those who attended. The first scene thrown upon the canvas by the powerful lantern manipulated by the assistant, Mr. Maurice, was that of Rochester cathedral one of the oldest buildings in England, and the clearness of detail immediately brought the audience in touch with the times of long ago, and the graphic description gave a foretaste of the events which followed. Gad's Hill, the scene of Falstaff's encounter, so well depicted by Shakespeare, and a place which was in later years the abode of Charles Dickens, won applause. The tomb of Thomas à Becket and a delineation of the murder of that saint (canonized by Pope Alexander III) in the north transept of Canterbury Cathedral brought to view historical facts which needed only the graphic word-picturing to most plainly present that deplorable occurrence.

Beautiful views of many notable scenes, cathedrals and noted buildings in Liverpool, Durham, York, Minster, Chatsworth, Stratford on Avon, including Kenilworth Castle, Shakspeare's home, tomb and monument, Oxford, Eton and Cambridge, were presented. Various views, exterior and interior, of Windsor Castle gave the audience a grand opportunity to visit this noted queenly residence. Other scenes of places made famous in poetry and prose by England's greatest and best writers were placed in view and were much appreciated. As the last scenes of all Mrs. Ganns delighted the audience by showing several pictures of the trial trip of the U. S. S. Monterey. The spectators could see the breaking waves dash high above the bow of the vessel and could, almost, hear the rush of the waters that flooded the forward deck of the vessel. As a lecturer Mrs. Ganns scored another success, and the views presented were the best ever thrown on canvas in this city.
